PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT CERTIFICATE

Title: The latest thinking on child development

Are preschools that look like elementary schools developmentally appropriate?

Do you believe that young children must complete their “work” before they can “play” with clay or read books for fun? Or are “playing with clay” and “learning” the same thing at this age?

PDC Overview

Classrooms sometimes look similar regardless of the age of the child. However, early childhood education is more than just preparation for elementary school. The needs of preschool-age children are unique and different from the needs of children who are both older and younger than them. Child development is the study of how and why children develop their thought processes, patterns of social behaviour and emotional reactions.

In this PDC, look out for stories about Anita and her friend Nancy, each of whom have two children. Their observations and dilemmas about their children are presented throughout the module, highlighting several aspects of child development.
